As a matter of fact it is just as ! healthy as any other portion of the Peak Disriot if perhaps not quite as easily accessible by ramway. It should not be forgotten, however, that it is approached by the best graded and uniest us well as the most picturesque of the mountain roads. Magazine Gap inquestionably has its own special advantages in being below for level, and in being independent of the tramway, since three coolies can with ease curry any parron of ordinary weight or size to that elevation by the admirably graded roud made by Mr Price. It will not be long before the merits of this locality as n salubrious place of residence are again generally recognised.—I am, Sir, GLADSTUNE'S HOME BULE SPEECH. London. 13th February. Gladstone slept well last night and awoke refreshed, anticipating with pleasure the exertion of the day in connection with the debate on the home rule bill. 1889. Ireland could present only a small mino rity in favour of restoring to her something i the nature of constitutional rights and practical self-government. It is to me astonishing that so litt's weight is attached by many to the fact that before 1886-before 1885, indeed-the Irish wishes of self-government were represented on by a small minority. Since 1880, when the wid extension of the franchise was protected by th secret ballet, Ireland's position has been im proved in Parliament. ## JACK AND JILL.

ONE CHAPTER STUDY IN HUMAN NATURE "I think you're horrid!" said Jill from the sofa, where she rookeed in semi-invalid style, one foot encased in bandages—"downright horrid: ves. I do !" and her tone was suspicious. v like tears. "I wouldn't go away all day skating by myself if you were ill and had to lie I'd stay home and be good to you. I would." the young man addressed, was at the viner up some sandwiches cook had out They would not pack tightly and evenly: truth to tell, he mis ed his little cousin's nimble which generally performed such-like small offices for him. Lat he could not ask her help now; she was so cross, he muttered, as he tied the string at last around a certain curiously. shaped package, from which any sandwiches must inevitably issue much dilapidated. Sunday pricks made themselves felt in a hidden portion of John Ashton junior's frame, but importious to their action, he assumed a lordly manner, and remarked: Yes, that's just like you girls—dog-in-the manger creatures ! You'd make a fellow stay home a frost like this just because you were such a silly-ninny as to fall down and twist your ankle yesterday. You wouldn't have done it, either, if you hadn't been trying to beat me racing—which, of course, you

This was too much for the heart of woman. child to bear. To less the fun of skating: to have a bad aching, pain all up one's ankloand leg : Jack to be angry : and, mereover, to be called a silly-ninny, when she had borne the nasty sprain without one ory yesterday, and had even limped prinfully off the ice, and climbed part way up the bank with white determined lips, until she slipped down almost unconscious from the pain, and was picked up and carried home by a strange gentleman. I don't want you home! I wouldn't go out with you if I could!" And Jill turned about, buried her face in the pillow, and subsided into a tearful, pitiful heap. After a few more pricks somewhere within him:

Jack walked out of the room with great dignity. remarking andibly, "Cry-baby!" and a minute later the house-door banged behind him. saring the goor close. Jill's tears came faster and faster. She gave herself up to luxurious misery. After a time she turned the old sofa pillow-it was getting so damp-and wondered sentimentally could people die of the combined effects of over-much weeping and a sprained foot? Would it take long to kill her? Suppose Jack came back that night and found h r dead : how sorry he; would be! What would he say? And with this pleasing and interesting subject for speculation, the tenrs came less quickly, finally oeased, and the extremity of woe-begoneness left her. Poor little Jill! She was such a warm-hearted little mortal, and absolutely devoted to her oquein fack. Ever since, when a tiny child, she had been sent over from India to her aunt's English home. she and Jack had been playfellows and friends. He was then a sunny haired, blue eved boy of four, and she a dainty, delicate dark-eyed baby of three, who struggled off her aunt's lap, and would not be comforted for the loss of the dark ayah, who, having brought the child to England, went back to her own country to serve little Jill'a mother again. Jack surveyed the small stranger, the unwilling usurper of his place and his mother, with at first dismay, which speedily changed into interest, then concern as her grief remained unshated. He lifted his short pinafore in a vain attempt to wipe away her tears, and finding that insuccessful, he trotted off to a corner of the mursery. where, in a basket, lay his kitten—his groutest! treasure-and returning with kitty grasped in his chubby arms, he proffered her to Jill.

Jill ceased her sobs; she put out a tiny hand and stroked the little black animal. She glanced up at the pretty fair boy who stood over her. charmed at the result of his happy inspiration, and finally put up her small face to his, and an- weather. nounced

" Jill 'll kies 'oo, boy." From that bour Jack and Jill's friendship began, and it had continued over since; by no means smoothly, with many a childish quarrel, and with as many a perfect "make-un" That evening Jack returned from his expedition, cold and rather cheerless of aspect, and though he took care to tell Jill he had had a spiffing time, he seemed to have no pleasant merry adventures to recount. Jill had undergone a system of comforting martyrdom had been fairly bearable. She had missed Jack dreadfally, and had given vent to long lugubrious sighs at intervals, when the the Ashtons gave a picuic to a little scaport thought of cutting through the air over the ice and her prisoner's state cume too keduly very fairly happy, and now, despite the

She looked puzzled as to wherein the differ not lay. is like old Mother Hubbard's dog!" And Jack took quite a vicious bite out of his bread and jam as a relief to his feelings.

Tea over, uncle and auntic went into the study to talk over business, and the children drew up along the country lanes, with soon the shining on either side of the fire. "What a shame !" she interjected warmly. " However was if, Jack P | and chin outlined against the blue sky. You're better than him-ever so much better one day, and he's a much better skater than

Jack was gratified at Jill's partisanship. He drew his stool nearer her couch and went into confidential details. That night Uncle John carried up to hed a very bappy little maiden. She gut her arms helpful to breathing or progress. But Jill did not think of that, only of how Jack had confessed that he had missed her—Jill -awfully, and it had not been half so desent skating without her. The years passed quickly by. Jack went to boarding school, and this was Jill's first real trouble. The months went past, and now midsummer had come again, and Jack was coming home for a long vacation; and Jill, though now more discreet and reserved, having come to woman's years was yet

Jill had grown older of late—older this last [Jill— week, it seemed to her, for something very uncomfortable and unexpected had occurred. It was this : Mr. Hatton had wanted to marry her. Mr. Hation was an old friend of Jill's. Indeed, it was he who, years before, had carried home the plucky child from the ice, when even a tolerably bad aprain would not let her give in. That was the beginning of their acquaintance, but he had followed it up with inquiries, calls, many kindnesses, to both the children, and as Till grow up, prettier than ever, and with winting gentleways. Mr. Hutton discovered that his life was a very empty, lonely affair, with his old maiden aunt as housekeeper, and would be a very suppy different thing if this little dark-eyed girl would learn to care for him. He was a good deal older than she—quite old n her youthful uncomplimentary estimationbut he had a heart somewhere : not worn out at all, a large warm one, and it had been growing side of the recitation of all facts known of the year after year more full of Jill. And at last it came about that he had told her

Jack came; a long-limbed, broad-shouldered, air-haired young fellow, with as pleasant a smile as one could wish to see, and such a genial hearty way about him. He quickly fell into the old

Long misty happy days boating on the river, pienics and friendly morrymaking: there were extra little feativities that summer, as there was talk of Jill's going out to India on a long visit to her unknown father. and everyone wanted to show their kindly feeling to the girl before she left. There were lazy days in the old garden, all deep in books, though no story seemed so sweet to Jill as her own little story being written in that sunny summer walk for miles without fatigue. > > WHY IS IT?

Why is it that death should come before the allotted age of "three score and ten," and why so many millions of human beings never live three score and five, and why that not one in every thousand live to three score years? We kill ourselves. Many interesting particulars are found in tables of physiologists and writers on hygiene. The eminent physiologists, Haller and Buffon, present interesting particulars on the subject of longevity. They treat it in two ways, historical and physical. The historical naturally ordinary and extreme duration of life and the physical aspect of the problem involves the contemplation of the great natural phases of development of the species, digestion, period of growth, and length of life. Mankind pays too little attention to the the affected organ increases and after a time "It wasn't my fault," sobbed Jill to herself becomes insensible, then no pain is felt and the sufferer is deluded into the belief that he has erroneous or dangerous, for the complaint has only passed on one further stage towards the end and nature ceases to send those warning sches and pains as they were unnoticed when sent, the debility and weakness increas, however, and nervousness, loss of appetite, and general languor comes on and a cold is caught la the kidneys, lings, or liver, and another Life is secrificed to Bright's disease, consumption, or some other serious and fatal disease. " For the past four years I have been a great sufferer from severe pains in the back and left side, being at times quite unable to doany work or even walk about. I suffered in this way until it became quite unbearable, and in February, 1889, I consulted a physician, who treated me for seventeen months, and during that time I suffered the severest torture under his treatment and instead of improving continued to get worse. He said at last. I have done all I can and you will never be better. This drove me to despair and I went under another doctor's treatment for four months and took about 30 ful ours affected by Clements Tonic and ou

THE PRINCESS OF WALES AND THE CHINOLINE. NEW YORK, 12th February. The crineline question is settled once for all as the Princess of Wales has taken a decided stand against the re-establishment of hoops in any form. She replenished her wardrobe recently in preparation for her approaching Mediterraneau cruise. Before making definite selections as to style her tailors sent her one of the latest orinoline skirts a tailor-made tweed garment of voluminous proportions compared with those now in ordinary wear, and stiffened with horsehair cloth lining so as to hold its

The Princess at once expressed her dislike of the new style, her good taste rebelling against it as inartistic, and she emphatically declared that she would have none of it, so her order was given for a number of costumes of the same severely plain fashiou as heretofore, depending for style entirely upon their perfect fit.
